Kazakhstan is currently the largest economy in Central Asia and is driving forward the modernization of its economy. Gross domestic product stood at around 288 billion US dollars in 2024; according to preliminary figures, the economy grew by 6.5 percent in 2025. With a share of over 32 percent, industry makes a significant contribution to overall economic output, with the mechanical engineering industry accounting for more than 13 percent within the manufacturing sector.

The mechanical engineering sector is experiencing exceptional growth: production growth of over 11 percent has been reported for 2025. This sector is therefore one of the most important growth drivers in Kazakhstan's industry and benefits from a sustained high demand for modern technology and innovative manufacturing solutions. There are currently around 5,400 companies operating in the mechanical engineering and metalworking sector, which together employ around 115,00 people.

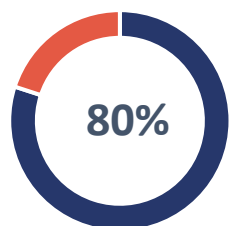

In addition, Kazakhstan is currently making great efforts to develop the engineering and manufacturing industry. The government's National Development Plan for Mechanical Engineering 2024-2028 is designed to provide targeted support for strengthening local industry, promoting technological advancement and boosting competitiveness, and has secured substantial investment funds for this purpose.

Thanks to continuous investment, the expansion of domestic production capacities and growing demand for high-quality machines and systems, the industry is continuing to develop dynamically and remains a central pillar of Kazakhstan's industrial value creation. This positive development offers German and international suppliers the best opportunities to operate successfully on the Kazakh market and to contribute to technological development together with local partners.
